Synopsis

Arthritis can be distracting. Distressing. And disheartening. It can make you hesitant. It can frustrate -- and even prevent -- you from doing all the things you love to do. It is, quite literally, a pain. The good news is that you can live -- and live well -- with osteoarthritis, the most common type of arthritis. You can get relief from its pain and its consequences. This Special Health Report from Harvard Medical School will show you how. You'll discover advances that are making a real and lasting difference and strategies that are helping men and women reclaim mobility and banish agonizing joint pain. Don't let arthritis pain get in your way! End the relentless aches and aggravation and start enjoying a more active and pain-free life once again! The report will brief you on breakthroughs in joint replacement surgery. You'll learn about the role of physical therapy as well as complementary procedures. And because medications remain the first line of defence, the report examines the effectiveness, safety, and possible side effects of more than 40 medications used to treat arthritis and relieve its pain. A special section covers a host of things you can do on your own to make coping with osteoarthritis easier.
